

Article #3 – Music Isn't Created in the Studio So When is it Actually Created?

By Adam Simpson

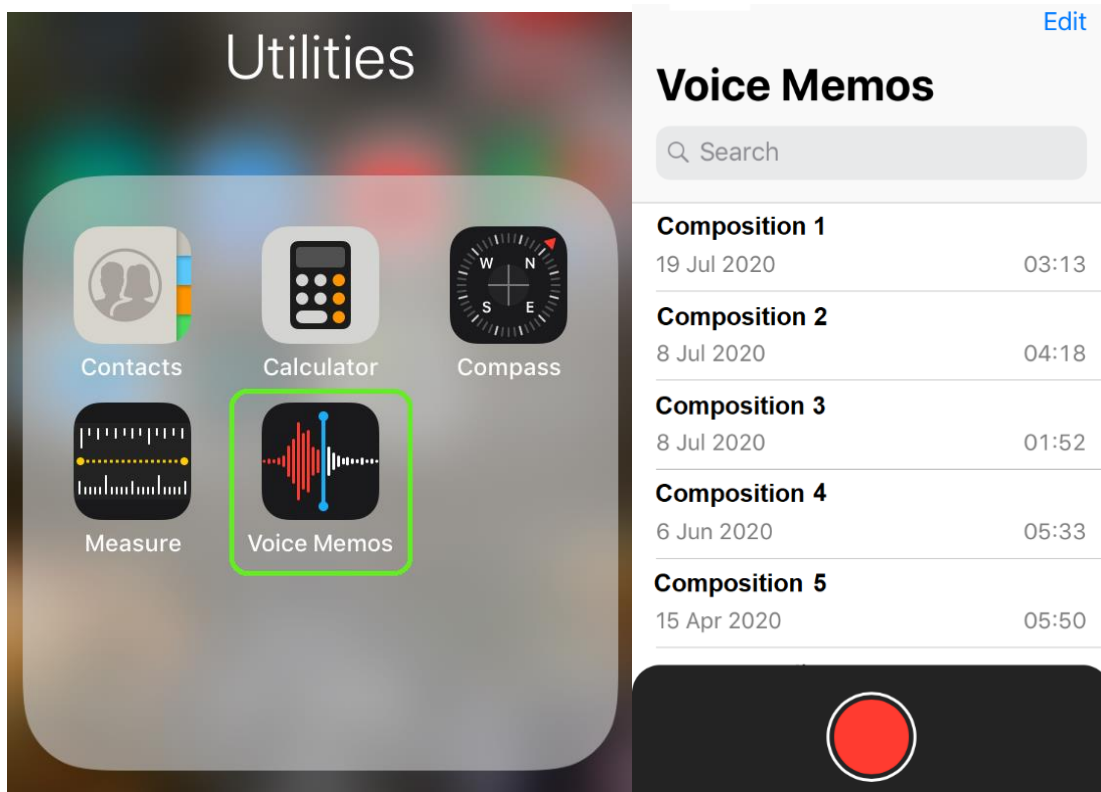

A lot of you would think that music is actually created in the studio. Well this is not true. The beginning in creating a music composition starts when the composer is in a specific moment, expressing him or herself musically with whatever emotion they have.

When the composer is in the studio, he or she would have a sound engineer who only makes the fine tuning to the sounds of the instruments.

For any beginner composers out there, I can definitely help you with this with the following instructions (and you only need your mobile phone).

- 1) Go to the Utilities section and then open the Voice Memos app.
- 2) Then press the red circle button and then start recording with your instrument.

That's it!

Thank you so much in giving up your time in reading this.

Yours sincerely,

Adam Simpson (Maestro)
